

MELINDA MYERS VAUGHN

DEPUTY DIRECTOR
BOLCH JUDICIAL INSTITUTE
DUKE LAW SCHOOL

Melinda Vaughn is deputy director of the Bolch Judicial Institute at Duke Law School, where she oversees the development and implementation of educational programs, conferences, events, communications, and multimedia projects designed to support and strengthen the judiciary and to improve public understanding of the rule of law and the role of the judicial branch. She is also managing editor of Judicature, a scholarly journal about judging produced by the Institute for federal and state judges.

With more than 25 years of experience in strategic communications, program development, and higher education administration, Melinda previously served as executive director of communications and events for Duke Law School (2007–2013); as senior editor and then senior manager for content marketing for Citrix’s software-as-a-service division (2013–2015); and as executive director of communications and events at the University of Southern California Gould School of Law (2003–2007). She has worked in development communications, public relations, and as an editor and journalist in Utah, California, and Ohio. She holds degrees in English Literature and Mass Communications from the University of Utah.