

Patrick Dempsey is an AVP for Cyber Risk Control with Travelers where he works with underwriters to better understand clients information security programs and help those same clients improve their information security practices. He has worked in the information security field for nearly 25 years. His previous roles include: FBI Special Agent investigating cyber crimes in more than a dozen countries; Chief Information Security Officer and VP of High Tech Investigations in two financial services organizations; Director of a new national security cyber defense program within the US Department of Defense; Technical Director for CERT/CC at Carnegie Mellon University; an international executive advisory role leading the establishment of the first national cybersecurity center in that country; an adjunct professor teaching cybersecurity at three universities; and the founder of the Cyber Risk Group LLC consulting company.